Appeal to take action and urge the U.S. government to extend New START

Distinguished Representatives,
Distinguished Senators,
Dear colleagues,

The New Strategic Arms Reduction Treaty (New START) is the only remaining agreement that limits the nuclear forces of the United States of America and the Russian Federation. If it is allowed to expire in early 2021, it will be the first time since 1972 when no quantitative limits are in place on either side. While Europe did not participate in New START's negotiations, it is both a beneficiary of the stability brought by the Treaty and a potential victim of much greater uncertainty and danger if it disappears.

As officials who strive to protect the health and security of millions of European citizens, we feel distressed by the possibility that New START may lapse in less than four months. We would like to appeal to our colleagues, the elected representatives of the United States, to act on this issue. The broad support that continues to be given to New START by many Members of the U.S. Congress gives us hope that bipartisan efforts within the U.S. government can help ensure the Treaty's survival.

New START has directly contributed to the achievement of mutual deterrence at a much lower level of strategic nuclear arsenals than would otherwise have been the case. The Treaty has thus helped stabilise the European security situation, which is a shared interest of all European Union (EU) and North Atlantic Treaty Organisation (NATO) members, including the United States, as well as wider Europe.

New START will keep the door open for continuing contacts as well as negotiated improvements – doors that are now shuttered if not fully closed. This is especially important in the context of nuclear weapons still to be regulated in Europe, including Russian tactical nuclear weapons, which all carry risks of accident and miscalculation and will not be regulated without a US-Russia strategic agreement as a foundation and steppingstone.

While we support the call to discuss the next generation of arms control and the need to consider the role of the Chinese nuclear arsenal, extending New START and engaging in good faith dialogue with other nuclear powers are not mutually exclusive. In fact, they are both necessary under the obligations provided under Article VI of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT) to which all five major nuclear weapons states are a party.

As was evident in the process that led to New START, time is needed to negotiate solutions that meet the laudable goals put forward by both the United States and Russia during their strategic stability talks this year. In short, extending the duration of New START is not an end. It is a mutually beneficial tool for maintaining stability, transparency, and predictability while we write a new chapter of arms control together.

In this vein, we welcome continued U.S. and Russian compliance with the Treaty and current efforts to implement it as much as the circumstances posed by COVID-19 will allow. While on-site inspections had to be suspended due to the pandemic, it is positive to note that at least 1,096 notifications have been exchanged by the U.S. and Russia between the end of March and early October, bringing the total to at least 20,911 notifications over the past decade. Without this information, the US and Russia would not have a current, system-by-system understanding of where the other's nuclear arsenal stands.

We also note the 328 on-site inspections that have been made to date, as well as the recently completed biannual data exchange on Treaty-accountable ballistic missiles, heavy bombers, nuclear bases, test sites, and storage facilities. If New START is not extended, all this valuable monitoring information will be lost, limiting confidence and communication that is important if Europe is not to be collateral damage in a new great power Cold War and an emerging nuclear arms race.

NATO Secretary General Jens Stoltenberg said it best earlier this summer: "We should not end up in a situation where we have no agreement whatsoever regulating the number of nuclear weapons in the world." To that end, we wish to express our interest in cooperating with you in urging the U.S. government to agree to the extension of New START.
